Virginia Employment Commission encourages customers to use www.VaEmploy.Com for Free Assistance

Richmond—The Virginia Employment Commission (VEC) offers free assistance at its web site, www.VaEmploy.Com. Many customers go to other web sites that offer assistance and later discover that there is a charge for this help.

Today's economy presents new challenges and the VEC has tools and information to help both job seekers and employers. Job seekers will find information on upcoming job fairs as well as information on available jobs. Those who are unemployed may file a claim for benefits, perform a job search, get information on educational and training opportunities, and find valuable information to assist in their job search.

The VEC has one of the largest pools of qualified workers in the Commonwealth. A convenient source of high quality Labor Market Information for making business decisions regarding employment, relocation, business development, education, and training is also available. Employers may post job orders, job fairs, find information about the state's unemployment insurance program, find out about the unique benefits of hiring veterans, and get information on tax credits available to them.

Whether you are unemployed, already employed and looking for another job, or an employer seeking qualified workers, this assistance is available at no cost on the VEC's web site.
